Who is Terryberry.

A leader in employee engagement for over 100 years.

Established in 1918, Terryberry has proudly empowered companies to honor their employees for over a century. What began as a venture in crafting bespoke jewelry in North America has evolved into pioneering the first online milestone service award programme.

In 2012, Terryberry foresaw the potential of more frequent recognition and introduced the first social recognition platform.

Whether it's a small step toward a big vision or a big step toward a complete solution that transforms engagement, we'll help you accomplish your goals — together.

Hard Rock Hollywood has streamlined and modernised our team member recognition through Terryberry’s easy-to-use digital platform, Be Recognised. The Terryberry team has been a great partner—helpful and attentive—from the very start to customise this program to best fit our organisational needs.

Why Employee Recognition Matters

Current Market

With unemployment at its lowest in over a decade, it's more critical than ever for companies to invest back into their employees to drive retention. That's where an employee recognition strategy comes in.

2.7x

When employees believe they'll be recognised for their work, they're 2.7 times more likely to be highly engaged.

Organisations with formal employee recognition programmes have 31% less voluntary turnover than organisations that don't have any programme at all.

82% of professionals feel that they aren't adequately recognised for their contribution.

12x

Organisations with sophisticated recognition programs are 12x more likely to have strong business outcomes.

65% of employees haven't received any form of recognition for good work in the last year.

#1

The single most important driver for employees to do "great work" is employee recognition.

Recognition all in One Place
